

Join a network

Benefit from building stronger relationships, improving referral pathways, sharing experiences and engaging in peer support by joining the Adelaide Interdisciplinary Health Practitioner Network (IHPN).

What is an IHPN network?

A network consists of a group of practitioners who voluntarily meet to discuss multimorbidity in the context of their local community.

Participants often include a range of allied health practitioners, GPs, nurses, pharmacists, and any other practitioner who works with people living with multimorbid conditions.

What happens at a meeting?

Network meetings can take many forms, from a guest speaker presentation, discussion of a case study and expert-led Q & A sessions.

Come along, have a bite to eat and meet other practitioners in your local area.

IHPN Interdisciplinary Health Practitioner Network

IHPN brings together practitioners to support collaboration in primary care and build referral pathways, ultimately improving patient outcomes of people living with multimorbid conditions.

Benefits of participating

Primary care practitioners who work with people living with multimorbid conditions can benefit by:

- free professional development which addresses long-term, proactive management of multiple conditions
- participating in meeting activities that meet self-reporting requirements for CPD
- receiving a certificate of attendance after each meeting
- increasing their awareness of other health professionals disciplines and expertise
- developing practitioner relations, thus improving referral pathways.
