Point of care ultrasound is rapidly becoming a powerful and effective diagnostic tool to aid the delivery of primary care services, particularly for GPs with limited access to specialist healthcare infrastructure.

At the same time, ultrasound equipment is becoming more cost-effective, compact and versatile, opening up possibilities for use in primary care settings.

The Introduction to point-of-care ultrasound for GPs Active Learning Module (ALM) aims to familiarise general practice registrars and GPs with the applications of point of care ultrasound as an instrument for clinical diagnosis.

Participants will learn to obtain and interpret sonographic images and will get hands-on experience of using point of care ultrasound devices under the guidance of experienced sonographers.
