Mental health tools: putting low intensity stepped care into practice

Low intensity interventions can be ideal for patients with mild-to-moderate mental health conditions, and may be more acceptable to patients than referral to a psychologist or pharmacological intervention. Upskill with mental health tools to enable you to put low intensity stepped care into practice.

Learning Outcomes:

Describe your role and responsibilities within your local mental health service environment

Describe mild/low intensity mental health presentations

List the resources available to manage mild/low intensity presentations in your practice
